BRUSSELS — Negotiators from the European Parliament and Council are set to hold their first negotiating session on the EU's Military Mobility Regulation on July 16, according to two people familiar with the negotiations.

Both Parliament and member countries have finalized their negotiating positions on one of the EU's flagship defense-readiness files.

The proposal seeks to speed up the movement of troops, military equipment and strategic supplies across Europe by harmonizing military transport permits, strengthening dual-use transport infrastructure and improving coordination between member countries during crises.

Parliament enters the negotiations seeking stronger provisions on strategic infrastructure, civilian logistics operators, fuel resilience and the proposed European Military Mobility Enhanced Response System — an emergency mechanism that would give military transport priority access to roads, railways, ports and airports during crises.

Member countries, meanwhile, want greater government control, more flexibility over the proposed military mobility “solidarity pool” for sharing EU-funded transport and logistics assets, and stronger guarantees that non-EU NATO allies can fully participate in the framework.

The Commission is pushing for a swift agreement. Transport Commissioner Apostolos Tzitzikostas has repeatedly urged lawmakers and member countries to preserve the proposal's core architecture and have the new framework operational by 2027.

The regulation is a cornerstone of the EU's Readiness 2030 agenda following Russia's full-scale invasion of Ukraine, with Brussels seeking to remove the logistical bottlenecks that have long complicated the movement of military forces.
